Upper 4 (S2) 13 – 14 years

For this last year of broad, general education, girls select two (or three) languages to study during Upper 4. They later choose nine GCSE subjects for study over the next two years of Fifth Form.

Girls pursue GCSE courses in nine subjects; the courses are examined and certificated at the end of Upper 5. Girls can also study for the Higher Project Qualification (HPQ).

Most girls take five subjects further, usually at Higher level. Girls select from a wide and flexible choice of subjects which cater for individual needs. The Scottish Higher is a university matriculation qualification and remains the gold standard for entry to Scottish universities. Increasingly, English universities are making unconditional offers to Scottish applicants with five (very good) Highers.

Upper 6 (S6) 17 – 18 years

A wide range of courses is available with the ability to design bespoke programmes to suit specific needs and aspirations. Many girls take at least three Advanced Highers courses, or a combination of qualifications. Girls usually apply for university entry in the autumn term of Upper 6.
